

Find out what is watching your town.

Wisconsin's open-records law lets any resident ask for these records. It is free or low-cost and takes about five minutes. Send your request to the county sheriff, your city police department, and WisDOT.

Ask for, in writing:

- How many cameras there are, and their exact locations
- The full annual cost, the contract term, and the renewal date
- How long plate data is kept (the retention period)
- The full list of agencies the data is shared with
- Any written policy for who may search it and why
- Whether a public transparency portal is turned on

A request you can copy:

"Under Wisconsin's public records law, I request copies of all records regarding automated license-plate reader (Flock) cameras operated by or for your agency: number and locations of cameras, cost and contract, data-retention period, data-sharing agreements, and any use policy. I request a fee waiver or an estimate before any charges."

Scan for the facts.

Full guide, templates, and what other towns found:

northwoodsfolkfree.com